Calculations based upon these showed for the most part good agreement in each period between the heat indirectly calculated from the carbondioxide output and the average respiratory quotient and that calculated from the oxygen consumption and the average respiratory quotient. This fact has been cited in discussing the maximum heat-output (see table 18, p. 113). Nevertheless, as each absolute value for the oxygen determination may possibly be subject to the errors previously cited, the values for the heat-output in this publication, except in table 18, have been calculated from the carbon-dioxide determinations, using the calorific value of carbon dioxide corresponding to the average respiratory quotient for the entire sojourn inside the chamber. CARE OF THE NEW-BORN INFANT. The general routine followed at the Boston Lying-in Hospital for the care of infants during and after delivery is as follows: The infant is delivered in the case room of the hospital. This room is kept at a temperature of 80 to 84 F. Ordinarily, after the baby is delivered, it is held up by the feet in order to drain the mucus j from its mouth and throat. About one out of five babies is patted on the back to make it cry and in this way to expand the lungs. The cord is then cut, tied with two ligatures, and sterile dressings applied. These dressings consist of two sterile sponges, one of which is put around the cord and the other over the...
